Edgewood Gardens Snowdrops & Companion Bulbs

September 20th, 2026

If you have been kind enough to visit my website and look at my snowdrop availability list over the past decade or so, this list will, unfortunately, come as a bit of a shock.

I haven't given up on snowdrops or killed all my plants. However, over the last three years I have been implementing a plan to transfer all the winter-spring flowering species and cultivars into the garden. The contents of over 700 pots of snowdrops have been planted out. The main driver has been to drastically reduce the massive amount of time and resources needed to maintain the collection in pots. Secondarily, the bulbs will ultimately grow much better in the garden. Unfortunately, and the reason for the paucity of snowdrops available in this list, I'm going to let things settle down in the garden for a few years before I consider propagating select varieties again.

Summer is my least favorite season, so I have always eagerly awaited the summer to fall transition and the cooler and damper weather it brings, which triggers growth of a wonderful array of fall-flowering bulbs. I've been lucky to have access to seeds of an incredible array of fall-flowering snowdrop species, as well as seeds and bulbs of similar representatives of genera including Cyclamen, Narcissus, Crocus, Arum, Hyacinthoides, Colchicum, Empodium and Sternbergia. They really enjoy the long and protected growing season they get in my greenhouses and cold frames, so the collections of those have expanded to fill the room left by the departing snowdrops. More of those, including unique selections, will appear in this list over time.

Meanwhile, this short list represents bulbs that are currently for sale, subject to availability.

Please order as soon as possible; quantities are very limited.

Email orders to info@edgewoodgardens.net.
